City's Social Life

THE GAYETIES AND ACTIVITIES OF THE WEEK

The Eligible Man.

FROM THREE STANDPOINTS. Bustling with business, weighted with care, Self-made and full of the confident air Such men assume; not bad looking withal, Courtship's with him a perfunctory call Once a week, say! Not a bit of romance Blooms in his heart, not a rapturous glance Beams in his eye, not a jealous thought stirs— This is the suitor that papa prefers.

Quite given over to brassies and cleeks, Haunting the seashore for weeks upon weeks Every summer; adept in the dance, I wlight and moonlight and starlight romance, Kind to old ladies-attention's his forte! Model young man of the Beau Brummel sort, One who a love for tea-tipples avers-This is the suitor that mamma prefers.

Ah, there's another whose features I'd trace-Brawny of muscle and pleasing of face-Rushing and punting and kicking a goal. Worthy of heart-feast and flowing of soul! Though I am tempted and tried I am true, True to his flag, be it crimson or blue. Gridiron hero, what care we for pelf? You are the one I'm in love with-myself! -Roy Farrell Greene, in Brooklyn Life.

The Young Girl in Society.

Harper's Weekly. Mrs. Mary St. Leger Harrison, a daughter of Charles Kingsley, known as a writer | York to spend her vacation. as Lucas Malet, has been giving some consideration to questions relating to "American Society." She finds that our "society" has drawbacks, and instances as the most portance." Ordinarily we resent the imputations put upon us by foreign critics, but in this instance we are rather glad to acknowledge the corn, and to add further that we glory in our weakness. No man ever lost anything of his fineness by trying to live up to the ideal the young girl has of him. No raconteur ever found greater spur to the telling of his stories in the best possible form than that which comes through the knowledge that the ear of a fresh and eager mind is hanging upon his No brilliant conversationalist ever found his brilliance dimmed in the presence of a young creature whose appreciation of his wit and wide range of knowledge were as yet undulled by the long years of contact with a blase world. We tention to the young girl in this country, and it has been one of the refining elesacred precincts of the nursery, we shall not only stunt her development to her own selves a new society which shall be a hollow sham; devoid of charm; devoid of freshness; devoid of life, beauty, and happiness; and made up of groups of erudite egotists than whom there is no greater bore in all creation.

What has become of the poor belle? I mean the girl who, just because of her own attractiveness, has all the attention any girl could wish, in spite of all the rich girls. Just a little time ago, when the dowagers of to-day were in their teens, girls were truly taken at their worth, and fortune hunters weren't so plenty nor so matches nor sincere romances now, but certainly men do not conceal the fact that they wish to "marry money." In the old days there was a girl in every set who came from an old-fashioned, shabby home, who wore the muslin gown that she made herself, the gown that was freshly laundered over and over again during the season, varying it with pale blue, or pink, or black velvet ribbons; whose pretty face or sweet manners made her the most sought after girl at every party-always sur-rounded by men and her programme always full-when many and many a rich girl was a wall flower and remained an old maid for want of suitors. Poor girls in New York society, with a few exceptions, say there is no chance for any girl who pect, and, be it said to the shame of Amer- are to be given to the Katherine Home. can men, also with some exceptions, that they marry rich women or not at all. Be the girl ever so unattractive, so she has assured. The debutante list is such a long and witty remarks by Rev. G. L. Mackone this season that there will be ample opportunity to see the fact illustratedguesses would be unbecoming now.
